YOUR PROBLEMSby
Ann
Landers"From Now On...
Separate Checks..."

Dear Ann Landers: I've read every imaginable kind of problem in your column, but not this. We are very friendly with a certain couple, and because of the nature of our businesses, we eat out together at least once a week. They always bring their teenager along — so there are three of them and two of us.

This son of theirs is sort of a smart-aleck punk, which naturally, they don't see. He only goes for a steak — and of course only the most expensive cut will do. They laughingly say "Orville has high-class taste" and then let it go at that. When he orders strawberries out of season (a la carte) I'd like to wring his high grade neck.

We have always split the check in half, but frankly I am getting pretty tired of paying for 50% of this 14-year-old gourmet's fancy taste. Is there a way out?

—CANT AFFORD IT

Dear Can't: Yes. The next time you dine together do this: Both you and your wife order inordinately expensive dinners. Start with avocado and crabmeat. Go hog wild. Rock Cornish hen is nice. Try the artichoke salad. Baked Alaska for dessert is lovely. Then say, "Look, it's not fair for you to pay for half of this. From now on we're going to have separate checks."

Dear Ann Landers: Several weeks ago I met a Marine on a double-date. He was with another girl and I was with another fellow. He is 19 years old and very smooth.

The Marine has telephoned me four times (long distance) to ask for a date since he is stationed in a nearby city. He thinks he'll be shipping out in a few weeks and he is eager to get to know me better. My mother says I can't go out with a fellow I know nothing about, but she is willing to have him over to dinner and have us spend the first evening at home.

I am 18 and have dated several fellows. I think my mother is being unfair. A girl of 18 should be able to take care of herself on a first date.
